THIS BOOK—the fourth—continues the genealogical record of the Wildbore family, completing the ninth generation. . . . . Revisions and corrections in previous volumes are shown in the Addenda section.

ERRORS AND OMISSIONS

In the compilation of a work of this kind, data is obtained from many sources. This data in many cases is recorded in family bibles, public records, etc. Often the penmanship—none too good when done—has, with the passing years, become difficult to read. Every possible effort has been made to reconcile all differences and secure the actual facts. Notwithstanding, errors and omissions will be discovered. We will appreciate hearing of any such, so that the corrected data may be printed in a later volume.

IMPORTANT—CONSULT INDEX IN ALL VOLUMES

Read This Explanation Carefully:

This record is the largest and most comprehensive of an American Colonial family, in all its branches, ever compiled.

It lists from 75,000 to 100,000 individuals, descendants of one man or allied by marriage with these descendants.

To identify each individual, an efficient system of indexing is essential; therefore, this explanation to assist those not familiar with genealogical recording.

Each individual has an individual number. This number is preceded by a letter. The letter indicates the generation, thusly: Samuel Wilbore, the original emigrant, is "A," or the first generation; "B" is the second generation, Samuel's children; "C" is the third generation, Samuel's grandchildren, and so on through to "M," the twelfth generation.

Notwithstanding the vastness of this record, the listing of many families is incomplete or are totally lacking. Information pertaining to these families is coming in all the time.

Such data, when possible, is included in its proper sequence; if received after the record has been printed, it is shown in the Addenda section, with the later generations shown in their proper place.

(a) in the index indicates that the individual's record is in the Addenda in the volume in hand. (b) in the index, that the record is in the Addenda and also in the regular text of the volume in hand.

Tracing backward from an individual listed in the later generations, it is important to consult the index in each volume to insure getting such data on earlier generations as may be shown in the Addenda and not shown in the regular text in books covering the early generations.

ADDENDA

Since the publication of previous books, the continuous study and research through old records has disclosed information adding to the record as previously shown. The items recorded here are, in many cases, minor in importance, but it is our aim to add, as it may be secured, all data. Owing to the interest shown by many members of the family, it is expected that more will be added, and such additions and changes will be published as opportunity permits.

In all cases consult the index and text in the latest book and compare and use with the information previously published.

This article is based on material compiled by Benjamin Franklin Wilbour of Little Compton, who for many years has diligently searched the records, both in this country and England, to fill in the history of the Wilbour family. Many of Mr. Wilbour's historical writings have been published in "Ye Wildbore," the monthly bulletin published by John R. Wilbor for a family association, with headquarters in Baltimore, known as The Wildbores in America. He also has played a large part in compiling material for a history of the family, one volume of which, and its revision, has already been published, with others to follow. Benjamin Franklin Wilbour is co-author with John R. Wilbor of the revision and the volumes that are to follow.

The article below is a condensation of the first paper ever read before the Little Compton Historical Society. Mr. Wilbour lives on the farm of his ancestors on the Great West Road in Little Compton, where he was born in 1887.

Sometime in the early Seventeenth Century at least within thirteen years of the first landing at Plymouth, a man named Samuel Wilbore arrived in Boston from England. It is known that he was born in 1585, during the latter part of the reign of Elizabeth, and that on December 1, 1633, he and his wife, Ann, joined the First Church in Boston; but his history during the forty-eight intervening years is, to adopt a badly shopworn expression, "cloaked in mystery."

Today there are in the United States thousands of Wilbors, Wilbours, Willbors, Wilburs and Wilbers who would like to know more about Samuel, because they all may trace their descent back to him as the first member of their ancient lineage who came to America. In every State north of the Mason and Dixon Line his family flourishes—in New York alone there are Wilbors, etc., in 300 towns—but for the first century after Samuel landed in Boston the strongholds of his transplanted race were Taunton in Massachusetts, Portsmouth and Little Compton of the Old Plymouth Colony, now parts of Rhode Island. The Wilbour spelling, rarest in the tribal etymology, was used solely by the Little Compton branch.

It is not known definitely from what part of England Samuel came, but his home is thought to have been in the county of Essex. There is a tradition that, like the Pilgrims, he went to Holland before sailing for America; also the family counterpart of the extensive legend that there were three brothers (which is not true) and that money in the court of chancery awaits those descendants who produce the proper credentials. But let no Wilbore (etc.) stay awake devising plans for the spending of this money.

Boston, in the days before man-made geography, was a peninsula connected with the mainlaid by a narrow isthmus, fenced off at both ends to serve as a cow pasture, and Samuel Wilbore was keeper of the gates. In 1634 he was one of a committee of six commissioned to buy Boston Common from William Blackstone. Wilbore, besides being keeper of the Roxbury Gates, was a woolen merchant, and had one house at the Roxbury line and another on Milk Street, near those of Governor Winthrop, Ann Hutchinson and the parents of Benjamin Franklin. Milk Street was then inhabited by the well-to-do merchants of the town, who lived over their stores.

In 1644 the government of Massachusetts Bay sent Wilbore and Robert Harding to induce the Narragansett Indians not to join in war against the white men. They tried to get Benedict Arnold to act as their interpreter and, when he refused, took Roger Williams to perform that office. Of this involvement, Bradford's History of Plymouth says:

"This news coming into the Bay, did so vex the ministers that Master Cotton preached upon it, that it being so wicked an act to take Mr. Williams with them, being one cast out of the church. It was all one as to ask council of a witch and that those who did it, were worthy to die. Upon which Mr. Wilbore was ready to die for fear he should be hanged."

Samuel Wilbore was among those who accepted the Antimonian beliefs of Ann Hutchinson and when the controversy of justification through faith versus sanctification through works reached its climax at the Newton (now Cambridge) synod in 1637 was one of those sentenced to banishment. On March 7 of the following year he became one of the nineteen signers of the compact through which the followers of Ann, led by William Coddington and John Clarke, incorporated themselves into a "bodie Politick" preparatory to the settlement at Aquidneck.

There, in what is now the town of Portsmouth, Samuel lived for a while and then returned to Boston, where he lived until his death in 1656. Ann Hutchinson joined the colony, but in 1642 removed to Pelham Bay in New York, where she and most of her family were killed by Indians in the next year. One child, Susannah, hid herself away but was soon found by the savages and taken into captivity. The treaty of peace of 1645 restored her to her people and she later became the wife of John Cole of North Kingstown. From this union descends one branch of the Wilbors, for Susannah's great granddaughter, Emlin Champlin, married Joseph Wilbor of the fourth generation, who was then living in Little Compton, and they have many descendants in that town today.

After Samuel's death, the family divided into two streams. The descendants of Samuel's son, Shadrach, settled mainly in Taunton and were the forerunners of the Massachusetts Wilbors. The descendants of the other son, William, helped to populate Little Compton and before 1800 had scattered through Connecticut and New York. William seems to have been a weaver of cloth and spent practically all his life in Portsmouth to his death in 1710. He had six sons—Daniel went to Swansea, Mass.; Benjamin settled in Dartmouth, Mass., and John, Samuel, William and Joseph all went to live in Little Compton.

The first William had acquired land in Little Compton, and in 1691 made over to his son Samuel one-half of a fifty-acre lot which was the beginning of Samuel's farm, now the Oliver H. Wilbor Place on the Great West Road. The rest of his land in the town he divided at his death equally among his four sons who were to make Little Compton their home.

Soon the tribal geographical castes of the Little Compton Wilbors began to assume the lines they have followed, with variations, to the present day. John settled in the eastern part of the town, Joseph on a farm just south of the Commons, William near the South Shore and Samuel on the Great West Road. Their descendants multiplied until at the census of 1850 one-tenth of all the inhabitants of the place were Wilbors (etc.) and the only other family that could vie with them in numbers was the Brownells, who were credited with another one-tenth of the population.

The first Little Compton Samuel's farm was part of the so-called Third Purchase, or the three-quarters-of-a-mile square bought on July 6, 1681, from Awasaunks, Queen of the Sogkonate Indians. The southeast part of the house is among the very oldest, perhaps the oldest, in town, dating probably from the last quarter of the Seventeenth Century.

The old place went through eight generations of Wilbors before it passed to other hands, and typical of the transition of S'cunnet is the fact that it was purchased at last by a thrifty Portuguese farmer. Many of the Wilbors of this branch were Quakers and many of them are buried in the old graveyard on the farm.

Until 1747 Little Compton was a part of Massachusetts and Samuel's will was probated in Taunton. Thus it began:

"In the name of God, Amen, this fourteenth day of January, 1729-30 in the year of our Lord, I Samuel Wilbor of Little Compton in the county of Bristol and his Majesty's province of Massachusetts Bay, being well of body and of perfect mind and memory, thanks be given to God for the same, calling to mind the mortality of the body and knowing it is appointed for all men once to die, doe order and ordain this my last will and testament. . . ."

One of Samuel's sons, William, became a Doctor of Physic, a profession favored by many of his descendants, including Thomas of Hopkinton, Amos C. of Fall River and William H. of Westerly. He owned three large farms in Little Compton, one of which is the place now owned by the heirs of John A. Seabury on the Swamp Road, where was born William's grandson, Isaac, the most distinguished of all Wilbours (etc.).

This Isaac Wilbour was born in 1763 and died in 1837, but in those seventy-four years he lived an active and varied life for one whose home always remained in Little Compton. He became a member of the General Assembly in 1801 and was elected Speaker of the House in 1805. In that year the people in the northern part of the town of Glocester petitioned to have it set off as a separate town and Speaker Wilbour cast his vote to break a tie and pass the bill.

The Senate rejected the act, but it came up again in 1806. Speaker Wilbour again broke a tie in the House, the Senate fell into line and the voters in the new town wished to name it Wilbour. Isaac was unwilling, and the place was named Burrillville after James Burrill.

In 1806 he was a candidate for Lieutenant Governor and was elected, but as none of the three candidates for Governor received a majority of the votes cast, that office was not filled by the election and Isaac Wilbour served for the two years as Acting Governor. From 1807 to 1809 he was a member of the Congress. He was made an associate justice of the State Supreme Court in 1818 and upon the retirement of James Fenner became Chief Justice, an office he held until 1826, when he retired because of ill health.

Lying on the ground near Tiverton Four Corners, long disused and neglected, is a stone post that bore its part in the most famous legend concerning Governor Wilbour. Early in the past century it stood upright near the southwest corner of the road junction and served as a whipping post.

There was a day when a terrified woman was bound to that post, sentenced by the court to be flogged for some misdemeanor. The women of the village crowded around, protesting against the execution of the sentence. Presently the "Governor" came along riding his horse and bound either to his home in Little Compton or to attend the whipping in his official capacity. The women rushed to him, demanding to know if the flogging must be carried out.

With great deliberation, the story goes on, the "Governor" read from the statute: "The condemned shall be tied to an upright post and flogged, according to the sentence of the court." There was another outcry, but with his equanimity undisturbed the "Governor" murmured, "But, ladies, if it happened that there was no upright post, how could the law be carried out?" Quickly men and women unbound the culprit and dragged the upright post to the ground, the offender escaped her castigation and ever after not a woman was to be publicly flogged in Rhode Island.

Probably about the time of his marriage, Isaac moved from his birthplace to what is now known as the Philip Wilbour place on the Great West Road and there one branch of his descendants has lived until the present day. His grandson, Isaac Champlin Wilbour, inherited the farm from his father, Philip, and greatly improved it. The oldest part of the house, which now forms the upper or raised portion of the main structure, is one of the oldest buildings in town.

In the middle decades of the last century, Isaac C. Wilbour carried on an extensive cattle and sheep business on his twenty acres, but as western competition grew in the commodity markets he turned more and more to poultry. Toward the close of the century this became known as the world's largest poultry farm, and the row after row of colony hen houses stretching over the fields formed a landmark.

It was Isaac C. Wilbour who named the Rhode Island Red breed of hens, and who played one of the leading parts in establishing it as a prosperous family in the poultry world.

When Isaac died in 1899 he left his farm and his "Awasaunks Park" to his older son, Philip H. Wilbour, who became successively Representative in the General Assembly, State Senator and State Auditor and Insurance Commissioner. He died a few years ago, and, in turn, bequeathed the old family homestead to his son, Lincoln R. Wilbour, who lives there today.

In 1756, William Wilbor, the aforesaid Doctor of Physic and son of the first Samuel to inhabit Little Compton, bought from the heirs of Col. Benjamin Church the farm that is now known as the Benjamin F. Wilbour place on the Great West Road. In that sanctuary centers another main stream of family history. The farm is a part of the Second Purchase (1673) from the Indians and a bronze tablet now marks the spot, near the shore, where the doughty conqueror of King Philip built a house about 1676. At the north the old farm was separated from Queen Awasaunks's reservation, which a little later was sold to William Pabodie, husband of Elizabeth, the daughter of John Alden and Priscilla.

The house now standing was built by Thomas Church, son of Col. Benjamin, in 1724, and six generations of Wilbors and Wilbours have since occupied it. Daniel, son of the William who bought the farm from the Church heirs, married Mary Southworth, whose ancestry went directly back to the Mayflower through Rebecca Pabodie, daughter of William and Elizabeth. Since Isaac C. Wilbour married into this branch of the family, two streams of Wilbours today trace their descent to John Alden and Priscilla.

When Mary Wilbour died in 1845 her will split the old farm into a divided ownership, but her nephew, Benjamin Franklin Wilbour, reunited it under his ownership and handed it on to his son, the second Benjamin Franklin, and he in turn left it to his son, the third Benjamin Franklin, and two other children, one of whom, Ernest, died while serving in the United States Army during the World War.

The first Benjamin Franklin Wilbour and his wife Abby Maria Taylor, are favorites in the Little Compton legenda. He was an easy going Quaker; she a stern Methodist, with whom exacting housekeeping was a mania. As president of the town's Women's Anti-Slavery Society she sheltered Frederick Douglas, the abolitionist agitator, when he visited Little Compton in 1843, and she was active for temperance and women's suffrage. Every piece of meat used in her house was washed in five separate waters and the straws in her whiskbroom were kept clean enough to test a cake.

Only a volume could do justice to all the Wilbours (etc.) who deserve notice. Let us conclude with mention of one other group. Governor Isaac had a daughter, Sarah Sowle Wilbour, who was keenly interested in the history of Little Compton. She was instrumental in raising the monument over Betty Alden's grave at the Commons and in marking the spot where the Peaked Top Schoolhouse stood from 1725 to 1839.

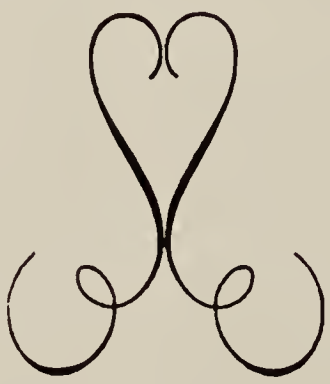
Her son, Charles Edwin Wilbour, remembered as a very active and impressive old gentleman with sweeping gray whiskers, went as a youth to New York and the making of his fortune in the printing business was not unconnected with the career of Boss Tweed of Tammany. At any rate, he found it convenient, when things were going badly for Tweed, to take up his residence in Paris. From there he made yearly visits to the Nile, lived on a houseboat, and became a famous Egyptologist.

His wife, Charlotte, was a nationally known Suffragist, and one of his daughters married the artist, Blashfield, whose murals adorn the dome of the Congressional Library in Washington.

With Isaac Champlin Wilbour, his cousin, Charles Edwin Wilbour was interested in beautifying the family cemetery on the Great West Road. Together they built the tower which is surmounted by the Egyptian Cross, emblem of immortality, and which holds the bells, brought from Belgium, that still at all too rare intervals chime their mellow notes above the graves of the dead and across the fields and woods of Little Compton.



If the Wilbour House could only talk

The old Charles Edwin Wilbour place at the corner of the Great West Road and the Swamp Road in Little Compton has been offered as a gift to the town's historical association by Miss Theodora Wilbour of New York, the sole survivor of a family which lived on it for several generations.

The association recently met, discussed the offer and left the matter in the hands of a committee appointed by its president, Rev. F. C. Southworth.

Only a few of the natives and older summer residents know of the rich accumulation of history and legend represented in the crumbling shell of a house that stands well back from the main highway about two miles north of the Sakonnet Breakwater.

During 34 years of disuse it has been ransacked by thieves and some of its heirlooms lost irrevocably.

During recent years its only utility has been as a resort for "neckers."

Dry rot and wood ticks have done for its once ritzy porte-cochere and apple orchard, the Blashfield studio is a wreck and the royal Roman box, that breathed its scent past the gargoyled front door for a hundred years, is but a wraith.

Only during the period when it could rightfully bear the name of Charles Edwin Wilbour have the lines of the original farmhouse been obscured by the additions which few of Sakonnet's venerable landmarks have escaped. Long before that it was the home of Aunt Sarah Wilbour.

She was one of that famous breed that was analogous to the Tantes of Scandinavia. These aunts were a vital group, salty and brusque, not afraid of a rough life or a man's work, and had reached the station in life when they could safely extend their brooding instincts to a much wider circle than that embracing their own families.

The word Aunt did not denote consaguinity; it was much more general than that and was used by young and old alike as a mark of affection and respect, if not of veneration. In some cases the prefix was followed for convenience's sake by the first name of the husband, as Aunt Abby Oliver and Aunt Abby David (a Wilbour and a Wilbur), but there was only one Aunt Kate, sufficiently distinguished as the town's midwife and for the pantelletes that fell below her skirts. And there was only one Aunt Sarah.

She was the daughter of a Governor; and in the straight line from that Samuel Wilbore who came to Boston probably from Essex, trekked to Aquidneck with Anne Hutchinson and whose grandsons went from Portsmouth to Little Compton about 1690. From their four fountain heads flowed generations of farm people, a horny skinned race of workers without nerves, and then suddenly in the early part of the nineteenth century came out of this stock Isaac Wilbour, Congressman, Governor, last of the "old style" Chief Justices of the Rhode Island Supreme Court, and "tops" in the Wilbour genealogy.

From this Isaac sprang Sarah Sowle Wilbour. The microbe that had quickened his brain quickened hers. She was a hustler and a good boss, she wore the pants and prodded her slower witted husband, Charles, and she had "ideas." One of them was the restoration of the old burying ground at the Common and another, the monument there marking the grave of Elizabeth Pabodie (Betty Alden), daughter of John Alden and Priscilla and the first white child born in the Plymouth Colony.

The Peaked Top district school, first house of learning in Little Compton, had stood on Aunt Sarah's farm from 1725 to 1839 and she marked its site with the peaked top stone which is still there.

Charles Edwin Wilbour was the son of his mother. The world was his oyster. He was born March 17, 1833, and came into young manhood at a time when the brightest boys of Little Compton were beginning to look for wider pastures than those enclosed by the old stone walls of their native town.

He went to Brown University as a member of the class of 1854, but apparently did not graduate, for the Historical Catalogue of the university credits him with no degree. But it is probable that he was one of the first natives of Little Compton to attend an institution of higher learning.

From Brown, he went to New York with his fortune to make. A good deal of mystery surrounds his career in that city for the next 17 years, but one thing is certain:—at the end of that period the fabulous oyster had been neatly opened and the precious pearl extracted.

He joined Horace Greeley's Tribune as a reporter and having gained some knowledge of shorthand was rapidly elevated to the position of court reporter for that journal. In those days stenography was a new and rare thing, but Wilbour became an expert. Greeley befriended him and presently the rising young newspaperman was the owner of a small block of Tribune stock, which he is said to have expanded considerably in later years. At some time and in some manner he must have studied law, for the Brown Historical Catalogue bears against his name the notation, "Lawyer, Egyptologist, Translator." He and his family were rising in the social scale also, for their friendship with the Greeleys and the Garrisons smoothed their way into the drawing rooms of the established literary set, whose prestige was greater then than now.

He may have practiced some law, but his activities seem to have continued mainly along the journalistic line. In the late 1860s, "Boss" William Marcy Tweed, of Tammany Hall, was organizing the gang that in 30 months milked the city of at least $45,000,000. He knew how necessary it was to buy the support, or at least the silence, of newspapers. Taylor, of the Times, was leagued with the Boss himself in the ownership of a publishing company that took care of the city's printing—at a price. The great Dana could not be bought, but he could be bluffed. And when Nordhoff, of the Evening Post, became troublesome, the ownership of that journal was induced to grant him a long vacation in Europe with pay.

Long after Taylor had died and the Times, under Jones, Jennings and the cartoonist Nast, had begun that crusade that made journalistic history, Greeley and the Tribune refused to get hot and bothered. Why? Was it because one of the Tribune owners had reasons to overlook many things? No certain answer can be given, but if you will turn to page 340 of "'Boss' Tweed," written by Denis Tilden Lynch and published by Boni & Liveright in 1927, you will find this paragraph:

"The Boss was also a newspaper publisher. His paper was the Transcript. It was a struggling morning paper late in 1869 when Tweed took it over. The Boss engaged one of his Republican editorial friends, Charles E. Wilbour, to manage it. Editor Wilbour held at least three city jobs simultaneously. He was stenographer in the Bureau of Elections at $3,000 a year; stenographer in the Superior Court at $2,500 annually, and Examiner of Accounts at $3,500. The Transcript was the official newspaper of the City of New York. No journal fared so well in the matter of municipal advertising."

And if you will read further, you will see how, as the Times pounded home the truth with its pitiless exposure, the gang began to break, some ran to cover under an ever-mounting wave of public anger, there was talk of vigilantes and lynchings; and then, as the denouement became certain, one after another of the leading conspirators made hasty getaways, leaving the Boss who had befriended them to jail, physical breakdown and death.

How deeply was Charles Edwin Wilbour involved? How much did he profit? There again the answers cannot be certain. But this fact is certain: sometime during that fateful fall of 1871 while the steamer lines were being called upon to arrange hurried departures for Europe, he was among those who took French leave and not for seven years did he step foot upon American soil again.

The sinecures that he held under Tweed, as listed by Mr. Lynch, brought him only $9,000 a year, and the gang was in power less than three years; yet when Wilbour took up his residence in Paris he was a wealthy man. He never had to work again, and he did not work, but his income was sufficient to all the demands of a large establishment that divided its time between the Continent and Egypt, and, later, New York and Sakonnet.

The mystery may be explained by the introduction to a catalogue of his library of Egyptian works and documents which was published by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences in 1924. That introduction makes no reference to any connection with the explosive Tweed affair, but it does state that before his departure for Paris, Wilbour had been president of the New York Printing Company. That was the company formed by the "Boss" and his confederate Taylor, which exacted terrific toll from the city's printing.

Wilbour's family was an imposing one. It was an important addition to the colony of American expatriates in Paris, but its arrival on the boulevards marked the beginning of a new chapter, and the Connollys and Sweenys, who had exchanged the hospitality of Tammany Hall for that of the French capital, were no longer in the picture.

In New York the Wilbours had achieved an acknowledged social standing before their years of great affluence. Not that they consorted with John Jacob Astor, August Belmont those "Princes of Erie," Jay Gould and James Fisk, Jr., who had found the Tweed connection useful. Rather their inclinations led them into the literary set, and they mingled with the Greeley's, the Garrisons, the Beechers and the Bryants. And in Paris it was the literary and arty side that received them, and whose salons they graced.

Charles Edwin Wilbour had married Charlotte Beebe, a woman "stylish and noticeable," and a figure among the intelligentia on the distaff side. She was a founder and first president of the Sorosis Club of New York, the pioneer woman's club in the United States, and an active leader in the movement for suffrage for women. She had distinction rather than beauty, but her white netted hair, her thin, blue-veined hands, her correct veils and the decent reserves which shaded her most cordial responses showed her breeding.

Charles Edwin himself was only one jump from the soil, he was the product of a thousands years of yeomanry, but it took only a few decades to polish him off into something little resembling his father. He was tall and well put together and his blue eyes snapped under bushy white brows and there was jest and cunning in them. Those bushy brows and the lush hairs that grew from his nostrils were marks of the primeval Wildbore in him.

But his fingers were strangely slim and tapering for a son of the soil and they ceaselessly stroked the wide mus-tachios and the full white beard that fell in a stroke almost to the middle of his body. None dressed for any occasion better than he and his whole presence was that of a man at home in any waters. But under those nerves, suddenly discovered after thirty generations, and under those polished manners there was something crudely vital and ruthless.

The older daughter's name was Evangeline; but she was always known as Linnie. She alone of the children was born in Little Compton, and there are still those who live there who will tell you that "Linnie Blashfield was the most beautiful woman I ever saw." She was better than six feet tall, robust and firm-fleshed, inheriting her mother's deep, rich voice and more than her mother's brains.

As to her conversational abilities, there was a Little Compton native so impressed as to say she was "the most interesting person I ever set down to." It did not stop there, for her influence upon the literary and art circles of two world capitals was genuine.

In France she met a young American painter who had studied under Leon Bonnat, Gerome and Chapu and was then a regular exhibitor at the Paris Salon. His name was Edwin Howland Blashfield. They were married in 1881. He went on to become one of the foremost American muralists.

If you wish to see his work at its best, the next time you are under the central dome of the Congressional Library in Washington look upward. Among Blashfield's celebrated murals were those in the ballroom of the old Waldorf-Astoria, the Appellate Court of New York, the board room of the Prudential Life Insurance Company, the Great Hall of the College of the City of New York; in the homes of Collis P. Huntington, G. W. C. Drexel, W. K. Vanderbilt and Adolf Lewisohn; in numerous clubs, banks and public buildings, including the State Capitols of Iowa, Wisconsin, South Dakota and Minnesota.

It is recalled that there was much comment early in this century when it was discovered that his design in one of these State Houses showed an ox-driver guiding his covered wagon westward ho!—but walking beside the off ox instead of the nigh one. Certainly from the Little Compton viewpoint this was a grievous error. It would not have been committed by a Wilbour.

Except for this faux pas, Blashfield linked well with the Wilbour stock. Like Linnie and her father and mother, he was erect, confident, sanguine, impeccable in dress and bearing; and he reaped many professional honors in his later years. In 1912 President Taft named him to the National Commission on Fine Arts. At one time or another he served as president of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the National Academy of Design and Society of American Artists. He lectured on art at Harvard, Yale and Columbia.

Such was the connection that reestablished the Wilbours in the art and literary circles of New York upon their return from the Parisian exile. But by that time Charles Edwin himself had gained considerable standing as a scholar. He had translated "Les Miserables" into English and he had become an Egyptologist.

He had begun to study the ancient civilization of the Nile Valley in his earlier New York days and his years in Paris had given him the opportunity to advance this study in the libraries and museums of the Continent. Then he voyaged to Egypt and, during several winters, explored the Nile on an Egyptian Government boat. In 1880 he bought a lateen-rigged dahabeah, "The Seven Hathors," and on this he and members of his family spent every winter until his death in 1896.

He voyaged the Nile deep into the recesses of a fabulous civilization, probing the mysteries of the temples and monuments, studying Arabic hieroglyphics and Greek inscriptions. He collaborated with Gaston Maspero, who as head of the Egyptian State Archeological Administration from 1881 to 1887 and again from 1889 to 1914, was in charge of important explorations and excavations. He discovered in one inscription the first reference to the canal at the First Cataract and verified the topographical details on the spot. He transcribed many Arabic inscriptions that have since been destroyed by vandals.

All this time "The Seven Hathors" was a resort for the wandering savants who had come under the spell of Egypt's past. By legend, the dahabeah was a luxurious affair, loaded up each winter in its leisurely crawling over the Nile with a vast professional library, souvenirs of the past and an equally imposing intellectual freight.

Mrs. Sidney R. Burleigh, than whom none knew the Wilbours better in their prime, relates that on one occasion when Maspero was absent, the workmen on one of his enterprises fell afoul of an obviously distinguished mummy. They turned for advice to Wilbour and under his direction a new Pharaoh was disinterred, transported to the coast in a first-class compartment and cleared through the Custom House as "fried fish." He looked so much like that, Charles Edwin told her.

Wilbour's collection of "ostraca"—broken bits of pottery and so forth bearing Greek inscriptions—grew steadily and his notes in Arabic piled up, but he never brought his discoveries into any organized written form and when he died in 1896 only his daughter, Theodora, could make anything out of the notes. The "ostraca" were given to the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and a treatise on them by the Belgian scholar, Claire Preaux, with transcriptions, was published in 1935; but not until long after new discoveries had outdated them.

Seven years immured in Europe far from the haunts of Tammany's Honest John Kelley and the Boss Tweed days were largely forgotten. The Wilbours came back to New York with added stature. They had annexed the legend of the dahabeah on the Nile and a rising young artist. A medallion head of Linnie, designed by her husband, appeared on an issue of two-dollar bills and she was the model for the central figure in the mural under the Congressional Library dome.

Reports of these things reached Sakonnet before the family reappeared there. But when they did come, it was in full panoply, with Blashfield, Linnie's cages of birds, and a lingering scent from the salons and ateliers. Aunt Sarah had died long since; the old house had been idle. It reopened now with eclat. The porte-cochere was stretched out hard upon the ancestral well the big bay windows built and, of course, the bathroom added and the piazza to the north.

The house was named "Awasauncks" after the Indian queen whose tribe of Sogkonates, always friendly to the white man, stretched from what is now called Windmill Hill to the wide sandy beaches on the Atlantic. Gilded plaques by Blashfield were placed in a gable above the bay windows to so announce it. The old woodhouse was renovated into a studio where the artist fashioned plaster-of-paris models and painted from them.

When they came back there were six of them—Charles Edwin and Charlotte, the two daughters, Linnie and Theodora (usually called Dora), the son, Victor, and Blashfield. The youngest daughter, Zoe, had been left behind in Little Compton, years before—in the little Wilbour cemetery a half-mile up the Great West Road. There had been nothing austere about Zoe; she had been a playmate to the Little Compton young people of her day and to this time she lingers with them, no longer young, as a tender and fragile memory.

She was more akin, in those early years, to her brother Victor. Then, there had been only one thing to repress him—he stammered badly. But he was a considerable gymnast and littered the lawn at Little Compton with his trapezes and bars. Afterwards, he boxed with professionals through the north of France—for the love of it—and is said to have given a good account of himself. He had the Wilbour frame, over six feet of it.

From Zoe's death he never recovered. For the rest of his life he was completely introverted and almost morbid. The thought of death seemed to affect him like a disease. Baudelaire had died before the Wilbours reached Paris, but Victor was a great reader on the literary side and doubtless got infected with the microbe the Decadents were still busily sowing from Parnassus.

There was one from the old Governor's stock, closely linked to the Charles Edwin branch, who repelled the fatal agent. His name was William Crary Brownell. He was a grandson of Isaac and had spent some of his boyhood, but not much, in the old maternal homestead in Adamsville. Like his cousin, he started with newspaper writing, graduated into genuine literature and became the chief literary advisor to the Scribners. Through a generation when the seeds sown by the Parnassians were taking root this side the Atlantic, he fought for Standards and Form and Tradition.

His style was difficult, and he was derided by those who welcomed the new literary creeds from the Continent, but his French Traits (1889), Victorian Prose Masters (1909), Criticism (1914) and Standards (1917) were considered major moments by the old school. Late in life he married Gertrude Hall, an authoress, and Blashfield, having lost Linnie in 1918, married Gertrude's sister, Grace.

Brownell was among those of the New York literary set who made occasional visits to the Wilbours after their return to Sakonnet. Courtly "Awasauncks" stood then, as it does today, at the southern end of Little Compton's Via Sacra. Most of the houses on that mile up to Taylor's Lane, and some beyond, contributed to the gracious social atmosphere of the place.

To the private theatricals and charades in Blashfield's studio came the Burleigh's—George S., the poet, and Sidney R., the painter—the Wilbours—Benjamin F. and Isaac—the Grays from the Betty Alden House and the Lloyds, who summered with them; the Browns from the Burgess Cottage and the Slicers from The Windmill. Edith Church, now Mrs. Roswell B. Burchard, came up from the road and Henry Richmond from down. There were only the Kemptons and Aldens at Warren's Point and not any literary landmark of note below the little gray wisteria-bound cottage of the Burleighs.

Richard Aldrich, later the famous musical critic of The Times, and others of the New York and Boston intelligentia joined them from time to time. For theirs was a literary and artistic group that, as in old Concord, loved the renewals with the land and the associations with its folks. They reverenced the gods of culture without making a plague and mouthing of the name. There was nothing esoteric and snooty about them, nothing pompous or hierarchical; they made out of a much libelled world something sane and liveable, without a trace of imposture. Their conviviality was conditioned on surviving Puritan restraints, and they were sincerely curteous and genuine.

Is there the equal today? God knows where. Surely not along Sakonnet's Highball Coast.

Poetry, without benefit of futurists, blossomed along their paths with modest flowers. From the Sakonnet landscape George Burleigh was distilling such aromatic liqueurs as "the pebbled marge of ocean wide" and "the sad carressing murmur of the wave." In his "old and silent wood" Isaac Wilbour was inscribing on signposts such sentiments from the prevailing school as—

"No tears dim the sweet look that nature wears," and from the traditional phrasing of Little Compton's psalmist, Ray Palmer, the spirit of the old town breathed upon those who had time to stop and understand—

"Here at the casement will I keep Still vigils with the sea and skies. . . ."

One summer Blashfield painted a portrait of "The Governor's Grandsons." They were Charles Edwin and his cousins, Isaac Champlin Wilbour and Isaac Wilbour Brownell, father of William Crary. Overlooking them was the dim presence of the old Governor. The portrait pointed up Wilbourdom to its summit. For years it hung in the home of Isaac Wilbour and is now at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

It was always big news in the household of Isaac Wilbour when the Charles Edwins were coming to Sakonnet. At "Awasauncks," the shutters with their heart-shaped openings had to be taken off, everything polished, down to the gargoyle holding the front-door knocker, everything inside aired, sunned and dusted, and the pantries stored with the best Little Compton could offer.

Isaac provided a cow and his little pacing mare called "Kittyhorse." After the family came over the road from Tiverton, he waited faithfully on his great cousin. Sometimes they drove over the roads together in the sundown behind "Kittyhorse." When the family went out, it travelled in the carryall, for four little mares could not have drawn the great coach that had served for affairs of state in New York and was brought to Sakonnet to be stored in the barn then still standing across the Swamp Road from "Awasauncks."

Recurring Augusts stored the house with new treasures—French stuffed furniture, Windsor chairs, Hessian andirons, Sandwich glass and Calla underglass. Each year there were new and rare birds in Linnie's collection, new books, manuscripts, "ostraca," and about the place always was the faint presence of old Pharaohs.

Close to the front door were the old Roman box, the Japanese quince and the creeping myrtle, and on summer afternoons they loaded the air with a close, hot perfume. In the rooms, the blending of the scent from the woods, fields and sea with the effluence of the old house and its Egyptian treasure chests produced a bouquet subtle and antique, and a little ghostly and disturbing.

Linnie collaborated with her husband and A. A. Hopkins in editing Vasari's "Lives of the Painters" and later wrote with Blashfield a literary treasure, "Italian Cities." Blashfield painted in the studio and marched the roads like a German officer, his cane subtending each forward quarter-circle with sharply thrust angles. Charles Edwin's white beard would flash here and there from the shadow of the sundown, and each summer Aunt Charlotte would mobilize the town's womanhood into another demonstration for suffrage. Sundays they all went to the meeting house at the Common and always caused a mild sensation.

Charles Edwin died in 1896. He was buried near Zoe in the Wilbour cemetery under the shadow of the stone carillon tower which he and Isaac had built. By 1903, the year the poet Burleigh died, only Charlotte and Victor came; then Charlotte died, and no Wilbour, save Isaac's daughter Dora, ever lived in the old house again.

Occasionally, around town meeting time, Victor would come to pass a few days with his cousins and to moon about the old place, where he said he could hear his father's voice speaking to him. And in the cemetery he would stand for hours, searching out the presence of his dead.

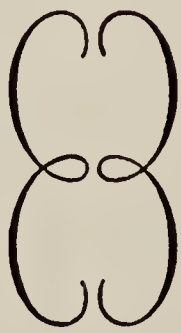
Each time he would choose a few more heirlooms and ship them to Providence or Brooklyn and as he left would always say, "You are very amiable, Cousin Dora." In Providence he would see his treasures safely installed in the historical museum on Waterman Street, have luncheon with Sidney Burleigh at the Art Club, and then resign himself again to the high calm of the Sherwood Studios on Fifty-seventh Street, where to rare callers he would lament the pass New York had come to, with "such crowds of Jews about."

In 1931 he died, adding to the Wilbour souvenirs in the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences the residue of his $1,673,664 estate as the "Charles Edwin Wilbour Fund." To the Rhode Island Historical Society he left, at the death of his sister Theodora, $20,000 in memory of his grandparents, Charles and Sarah Sowle Wilbour.

The treasures once encompassed by "Awasauncks" have been widely scattered. In the Boston Art Museum is Charlotte's valuable collection of 2,000 pieces of English silver, and in the Historical Society's museum in Providence, near a portrait of Zoe, her Sandwich glass, described as the finest in America.

Only Dora is left now. Linnie bore an heir late in life, which soon died, and then she passed away, four days after the Armistice of 1918. Gertrude Hall Brownell, in the biography of her husband, says of Linnie's death:

"We had seen her a few days before, when she appeared wholly her usual self. She had spoken then of a study of Madame Roland, which she meant to follow the volume published a few months earlier, 'Portraits and Backgrounds.' We knew that she had been ill with pneumonia the year before, but that was well in the past. Great mental vitality, with a fine well-grown physique, imposed the illusion of an abundance of life, a proud independence of the common snares of fate. . . .


"Aside from the personal affection of which she inspired so much, one suffered from her loss also in an impersonal way, as at the vanishing of a splendid banner placed at a high point. For she was the best we could do."
